McLEAN GROUP DEMANDS VOICE ON CIA PANEL

An ad hoc committee formed by neighbors of the Central Intelligence Agency, which has planned a $191 million expansion of its McLean facility, is fuming over what it sees as the agency's attempt to shut them out of negotiations, despite overtures by the large organization to include them.

Of the four bodies the CIA has invited to sit in on road-improvement plans and other considerations with the million-square-foot office building, the ad hoc committee of six surrounding communities—those most directly affected by the expansion—was not one.

"It's political hodgepodge!" said Gloria Adams, who heads up the ad hoc group. She added that she had understood from a June meeting at the CIA headquarters that the committee would be given a voice. "We're concerned about what's going on right in our back yards," she said.

She said that her group already has written up a charter for the board on which it has not been invited to serve. That, she said, is to make sure it is "not just a bunch of people who get together and bless everything."

Adams' contention that her group should be allowed to join the U.S. Park Service, the National Capital Planning Commission, the state highway department and the McLean Citizens Association (MCA) on the CIA's advisory board has the support of the MCA, as well as the endorsement of Sen. John Warner and Congressman Frank Wolf.

According to CIA spokeswoman Kathryn Riedel, however, the agency "would prefer that they (the citizens in the affected area) work through the McLean Citizens Association," which probably will have two representatives on the advisory board. "As far as I know," she added, "they haven't been asked" to join in their own right.
